

Due to the current crisis of home foreclosures, it is my heart to encourage women who find themselves suddenly uprooted from their “nests” with much grief. As a woman who has also recently lost my home, I decided to include in this ministry website a “Reality Series” if you will. Instead of writing polished articles on instruction, teaching, or “how to,” I thought it would best minister to others if I simply shared my emotional journey on line. My focus is not to bleed on paper, but rather to share with others just how God is meeting me in this loss.

The postings for this series are more like journal entries; with an honest look at the loss, as well as God’s awesome revelation of himself in our times of need. One could also compare this series to the Psalms in God’s Word, honest expressions from an individual child of God trying to find her way home like the rest of us. When David wrote the Psalms he was real, refreshingly real. One day he saw God’s sovereign hand amidst his plight, yet he was also consumed with hopelessness and despair at other times. I pray this series will be a refreshingly honest expression of my own journey in loosing my home. My hope is that others may also be validated and encouraged in knowing God is very much at work in our lives.

I have chosen the name of this series to be, “Loosing a Home...” I realize some of you may catch the assumed error in my choice of words. Most would correct me by assuming I meant “Losing a Home,” but I did not. You will find my reason for choosing the questioned word in my first posting of this series. As you read my new postings each month, may you hope and strength in knowing God is not only with you, but he is working all things for his glorious plan and purposes for your life (Romans 8:28).
